Raw Materials

The quality of every product starts from the selection of raw materials. Remove impurities in the clay allowing for better mixing and forming. That mixture guarantees the durability and quality of the final product.

Mold Casting

Clay slurry is poured into the molds where it remains in place for about two hours in order to obtain the desired thickness.

Finishing

The pieces go through a first finishing phase to ensure that the piece does not explode or crack due to moisture. which is carried out before being moved to the drying area.

Glazing

Glazes add colors to ceramic, improve its appearance and make it waterproof. adds a touch of finesse to ceramics, giving them vibrant colors, eye-catching textures, and a smooth finish. Packaging

Most important step in shipping the ceramic is using the right packing material to protect the items. The packaging allows our products to arrive at our customers unbroken. The new machinery allows a packaging that is perfectly compliant with transport.

High Temperature Firing

Firing is the most critical stage of the ceramic-making process. Ceramics are fired at higher temperature ranging from 1200°C to 1300°C. High-fire stoneware becomes hard, vitrified, and non-absorbent. It is extremely durable, especially compared to both low-fire and mid-range ceramics.
